1. Between 22 and 28 February 1951, the barracks installation in Zaschendorf near Meissen (N 52/F 09) was occupied to capacity by about 1,500 troops who wore red-bordered black epaulets, some of them with artillery insignia. Among the officers there were a few who wore tank insignia. Four light, canvas-covered guns, apparently not M guns, were emplaced north of the barracks installation, by the unpaved road to Alt Zaschendorf. There was little vehicular traffic

2. The barracks installation in Meissen-Bohnitzsch did not seem to be occupied to capacity. It quartered a unit, the personnel of which wore red-bordered black epaulets, about half of them with tank insignia. Little movement of troops was observed. A T-34 tank was seen in the billeting area. Motor vehicles

3. The former kommandatura building in Coelln housed German offices and families, the kommandatura having moved to Goethestrasse in the town sector of Niederfahre, where a tank repair shop was also located. The factory area there contains an administration building and three large workshops. A Stalin tank observed there was marked A-27. Motor vehicles observed in the factory area included truck occupied by two soldiers wearing red-bordered black epaulets; truck / occupied by two soldiers, wearing red-bordered black epaulets and carrying tank tracks; and passenger car / driven by an officer who wore ruby collar patches. **

Bohnitzsch barracks installation and the unidentified AAA Regt, possibly the 216th, in the Zaschendorf barracks installation. See [REDACTED] Contrary to the opinion of source, it is quite possible that the guns emplaced at the barracks installation in Zaschendorf were AA guns.

25X1A* [REDACTED] Comment. Though reported for the first time, the movement of the Soviet kommandatura seems possible. The tank repair shop in the factory area on Goethestrasse and Hainstrasse in Meissen-Niederfahre is known from previous reports. The installation is also referred to as the Imperial Factory.
